

DRINK OF WATER MAY COST THE LIVES OF TWO

Italian and Engineer
Fought About It on High Scaffolding.

BATTLED OVER RIVER.

McCaffrey's Blow Stretched
Opponent Out and He Died
Almost Instantly.

An autopsy will be held to-day upon the body of Ferdinando Mundo, a big Italian, who died as the result of a fight on the scaffolding of the East River tunnel at Thirty-third street and East River late yesterday afternoon. It is not yet known whether the Italian's death was caused by a blow received in the fight or from natural causes.

Patrick McCaffrey, who struck the blow, is under arrest charged with homicide. Assistant District Attorney Garvan has taken up the case, and should the coroner decide death was due to a blow McCaffrey may have to stand trial for his life because he refused a man a drink of water. He talked freely of the affair at the East Thirty-fifth Street Police Station to-day. He says he struck the Italian but once, and then struck him in fear of his life.

"When I saw him reach back I thought it was for a knife, and I let him have it," said the engineer to-day. "I'm sorry more than I can tell that he dropped and died, but I know I didn't hit him hard enough to kill him. I was only acting under orders when I put him out of the shanty."

Is a Little Man.

McCaffrey is a slender, little man, with muscles like piano wires. He talks with a bit of a brogue, and his smooth-shaven face carries a happy expression despite the seriousness of the position he is in. McCaffrey is the engineer of the little donkey machine that hoists and heaves all day long great beams and bricks and coal from the river barges to the scaffolding, fifty feet above the surface of the water. Trams carry the material back to the street, whence it is carted to the mouth of the tunnel. The trams are drawn back to the end of the straddling scaffold by Tonnato, the mule. Her driver was Ferdinando Mundo who lives at No. 225 Second avenue.

Of late there have been many thefts from the tiny engine-house that is perched on the end of the scaffold, and finally the foreman of the job gave orders to allow no one within the little coop. McCaffrey obeyed the orders to the letter. When a couple of the Italians came into the little room he ordered them out. They obeyed sullenly and then conferred on the narrow trestle that leads back to the main structure.

Demand a Drink.

Then one came to the door for a piece of rope. He got it and went away. Suddenly the door was flung open and the two stood at the door. One of them demanded a drink of water.

"You know where to get water," replied McCaffrey.

The Italian muttered and stepped within the door. McCaffrey rose and, seizing his shoulder, sent him spinning back. Instantly the man struck out. There was a brisk scuffle in which the other Italian took no part.

On the narrow plank, scarcely a yard wide, the two struggled frantically. When a couple of the Italians came into the little room he ordered them out. They obeyed sullenly and then conferred on the narrow trestle that leads back to the main structure.

The Italian reeled and as he toppled toward the edge McCaffrey caught him and caught him. Mundo sank to the plank. His face was grown suddenly red and bloated as he fought for the breath that would not come. He raised himself with a convulsive effort. "O Mama Mia," he screamed, and fell back dead.

Attacked by Friend.

The other Italian, Francesco Rossi, who had taken no part in the fight, stood over his friend and began to employ artificial respiration. The man's head fell limply. Rossi stared at the gray face, then he clutched his hand together and uttered a prayer.

McCaffrey threw some water in the dead man's face. Rossi turned upon the man who he thought had killed his friend and began to rend his face with his clenched fists. McCaffrey, stunned by the horror of the sudden tragedy, made no effort to defend himself.

It was here that the policeman and some workmen came running up. They dragged Rossi, raving, from the engineer, and it took four of them to hold him.

When arraigned in the Yorkville Court to-day before Magistrate Moss, McCaffrey was remanded to the custody of the coroner pending the result of the inquest.

ROBBED IN UNIFORM.

Alleged Fireman and Gas Inspector Called Before Theft.

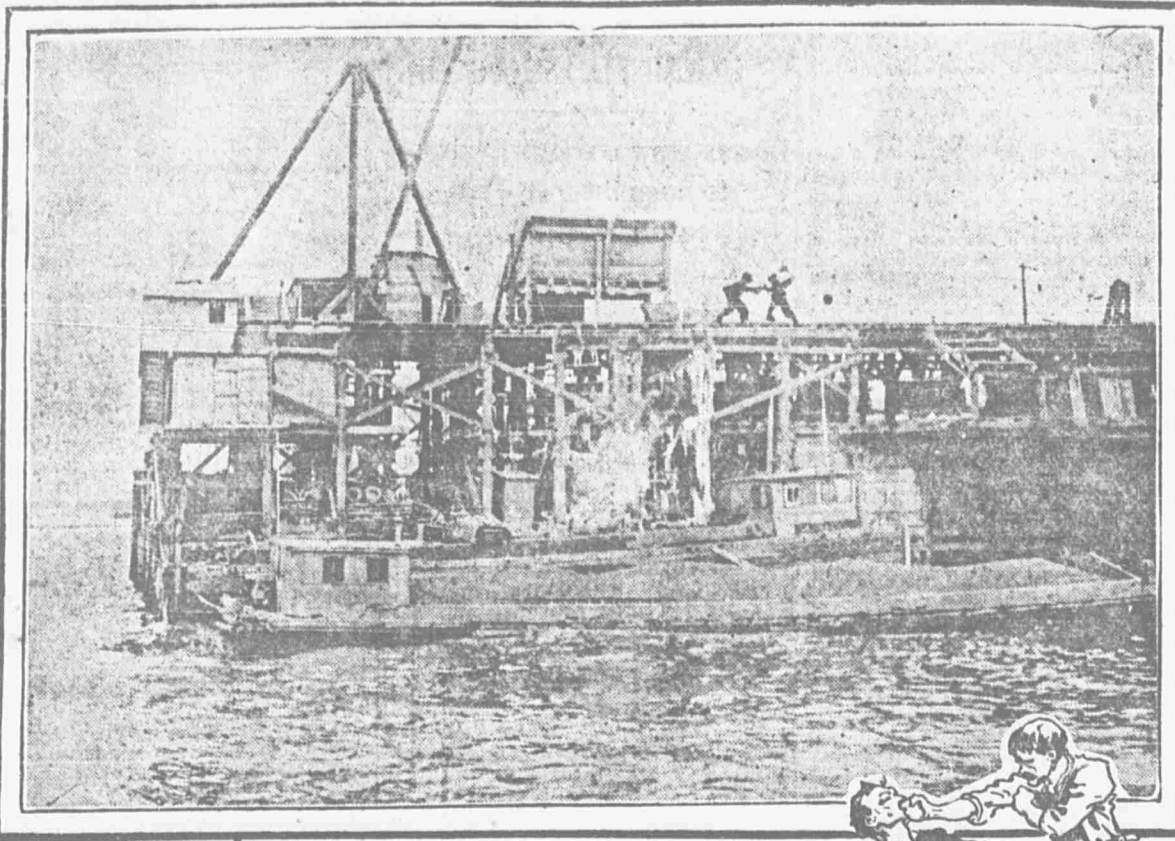

Two men, one clad as a fireman, who represented that he had come to inspect the premises to see that there was fire protection, and the other representing that he was from the gas company and had come to inspect the meter, are suspected of having robbed the home of Mrs. Frederick Hatt, No. 150 Greenpoint avenue, Brooklyn, of $1,000.

These men visited the Hatt home yesterday, and after they had gone the money was missed. The $1,000 was inherited by Mrs. Hatt a week ago. The theft has been reported to the police.

SLEUTH MUST QUIT SHADOWING BRADY

Defendant in Divorce Suit
Has Detective Kennedy
Put Under Bonds.

Daniel M. Brady, brother of "Diamond Jim," the millionaire race horse owner, who for three years has kept the city courts busy with his matrimonial troubles, to-day again appeared in the Centre Street Court.

Mr. Brady was accompanied by his attorney, ex-Congressman John Adams. He complained against Harry Kennedy, a private detective, whom he accused of following him about the country watching his every movement.

"If I awoke in a sleeping car in Oshkosh that fellow's face would confront me," Brady told Magistrate Steinert. "He has been following me for a year or more. I warned him three weeks ago that I would have him arrested unless he desisted, but this morning he stopped off a train from Buffalo the first man I saw was this fellow."

Kennedy said he was a detective, but denied he had been following Brady. Lawyer Adams told Magistrate Steinert that the third trial of the Brady divorce was to begin in the Supreme Court on Tuesday next, and for a month Brady had been annoyed by private detectives spying upon his affairs.

Brady's wife was Miss Singer, daughter of the millionaire sewing machine manufacturer. She is suing him for divorce and names an actress as co-respondent. Ex-Assistant District Attorney Rand is Mr. Brady's counsel.

Magistrate Steinert put Kennedy under $500 bond to keep the peace for six months. Kennedy's employer furnished the bond.

It was here that the policeman and some workmen came running up. They dragged Rossi, raving, from the engineer, and it took four of them to hold him.

FOOTPADS WAYLAY AND BEAT JANITOR

He Angered Them When He
Said He Would Give Them Nothing.

Frederick Falk, janitor of Public School No. 86, at Ninety-sixth street and Lexington avenue, was held up by three men near the schoolhouse early to-day, the men demanding that he give them money for a night's lodging.

"I haven't any money," said Falk. "I wouldn't give it to you if I did have it."

Falk is a big fellow, and when one of the men struck him it only staggered him. The three men fell upon him. Falk fought with all his strength, but he was not equal to the three men and they were getting the better of him. He called for help, but none came.

The highwaymen, finding that he had no money, took to their heels. Falk was badly beaten about the face. He was attended by Dr. Reed, of Harlem Hospital.

"I haven't any money," said Falk. "I wouldn't give it to you if I did have it."
